

Ken R. Linderman

Ken has been with Alaska Cleans Seas since 1990 and has worked on the North Slope of Alaska since 1983. Ken is currently the Operations Manager for Alaska Clean Seas.

Although the majority of Ken's spill response experience comes from the North Slope of Alaska, he has responded to several spills in various parts of Alaska dating back to 1983, prior working on the Exxon Valdez spill. He has recovered oily snow and ice, cut ice slots and trenches with chain saws, operated skimmers, deployed many types of boom, and managed large site remediation projects.

Ken is actively keeping himself engaged in Best Available Technology in the spill response industry. He has attended, participated in and delivered presentations on the topic of oil spill response at the International Oil Spill Response Conferences. He has had papers and posters published on various oil spill topics at these International events.

His education accomplishments is a bachelor's of Science degree from Central Washington University in 1987. He has obtained a Corporate Safety Management Certification through The American Society of Safety Engineers. A little on the personal side, Ken played college football at CWU and extended his football career over to Europe and played a season in the European Football League in Finland. He enjoys recreational boating on the Columbia River and Lake Chelan, Washington. He loves to snow ski and vacation in Whistler, British Columbia. He has two children, a son Brennan and a daughter Rachel.
